When industries aggressively market their products on the one hand, and minimize the risks of use on the other, consumers start to hear a lot more about "personal choice."

Each year the food industry spends billions on marketing, product placement, and advertising to get you to eat more of their unhealthy products. Keep that in mind next time you hear them blame individuals for making poor dietary choices.